Why Only Us: Language and Evolution
By Robert C. Berwick and Noam Chomsky

We are born crying, but those cries signal the first stirring of language. Within a year or so, infants master the sound system of their language; a few years after that, they are engaging in conversations. This remarkable, species-specific ability to acquire any human language—"the language faculty"—raises important biological questions about language, including how it has evolved. This book addresses the enduring question of University Press Scholarship Online (UPS O) brings together the best scholarly publishing from around the world.

Aggregating monograph content from leading university presses, UPS O offers an unparalleled research tool, making disparately published scholarship easily accessible, highly discoverable, and fully cross-searchable via a single online platform.

Research that previously would have required a user to jump between a variety of books and disconnected websites can now be concentrated through the UPSO search engine.

UPSO brings the same cutting-edge search and discovery functionality that has marked the success of Oxford Scholarship Online to a greatly expanded content base.

For Formal Organization: The Past in the Present and Future of Organization Theory

By Paul du Gay and Signe Vikkeiso

In recent years, disquiet has mounted within the field of organizational analysis, broadly defined, about the overly theoretical and a or anti organizational state of organization theory and its consequent lack of practical purchase, not least in the light of pressing economic, social, and political concerns that are often profoundly organizational in nature ... Messy Urbanism:
Understanding the
"Other" Cities of Asia

Manish Chalan

Seemingly messy and chaotic, the landscapes and urban life of cities in Asia possess an order and hierarchy which often challenge understanding and appreciation. With a cross-disciplinary group of authors, Messy Urbanism: Understanding the "Other" Cities of Asia examines a range of cases in Asia to explore the social and institutional politics of urban formality and the contexts in which this "messiness" emerges or is constructed ... Celebrity in China

Louise Edwards and Elaine Jeffreys

ABSTRACT

Celebrity is a pervasive aspect of everyday life and a growing field of academic inquiry. This is a book-length exploration of celebrity culture in the People's Republic of China and its interaction with international norms of celebrity production. The book comprises case studies from popular culture (film, music, dance, literature, the Internet); official culture (military, political, and moral exemplars) and business celebrities. The breadth of inquiry here illuminates the ways capitalism and communism converge in the elevation of particular individuals to fame in contemporary China.

Keywords: celebrity culture, People's Republic of China, popular culture, official culture, business celebrities around modesty, quietude and chastity as well as obedience to fathers and husbands. Women were charged with responsibility for maintaining the domestic harmony that underscored state harmony.

In over a century of modernization and revolution in China from the late 1890s to the late 1970s, these conceptions of the family and female virtues were labelled 'feudal' and came under concerted assault from avant-garde intellectuals and activists across the political spectrum, including liberals, anarchists, feminists, republicans, nationalists and communists. In (p. 46) their view, the traditional family was an instrument for oppressing women, a major cause of China's backwardness and weakness, and an obstacle to China's modernization. The family system required a major overhaul in order that China regain its lost status in the world and that women gain liberation from patriarchal structures. With the rise of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) this attitude became enshrined in Chairman Mao Zedong's dictum 'women hold up half the sky'.

However, since the beginning of China's reform in the late 1970s and the shift to a socialist market economy, the family has been reaffirmed as the basic social institution by the current CCP in a bid to prevent the further disintegration of the social fabric that is perceived to have resulted from rapid social change. As Elizabeth Croll (1983: 70) explains, the stability of this pivotal institution has once again become the mainstay of social relations and social order. The importance of family values, female virtues and motherhood have been further highlighted in the last decade or so, due to what Chinese academics and the media have described variously as China's 'moral crisis', 'family crisis', 'marriage crisis', and 'motherhood crisis' (Liu 1999).

Examples of China's social 'crises' that are enumerated by commentators include: rampant prostitution; prevalent extramarital affairs; growing numbers of de facto second wives; increasing divorce rates and domestic violence; the common practice of unmarried men and women living together; declining interest among young people in getting married or having children; deteriorating bonds between mothers and babies as more mothers reject breast-feeding and pass on most postnatal care to nannies; and the spoiling of children by parents (Liu 1999). The Party-state has responded to these 'crises', and the gap between what remains of the Chinese socialist value system and the changing social environment, by promoting the 'people first' principle (yiren weiben) and by concerted efforts to construct 'spiritual civilization', a 'new socialist core value system' and 'harmonious society' (Hu

Celebrity Mothers: Female Virtues, Patriotism and Social Harmony*
/hongkong/9789622090873.003.0003

Abstract and Keywords

China's imperial history, the state, the family and the individual were considered the three key blocks of the social system. As Mencius (372–289-BCE) wrote: 'the foundation of the world lies in the foundation of the state lies in the family, and the foundation of the family lies in the Mengzi IV A: 5). Followers of Confucianism also believed that the family and state were the basis of social organization' because they were based on the truest moral principles such as justice, rightness, loyalty and filial piety. Hence, traditional Chinese statecraft sought to bind the family and the state together in a singular status hierarchy so that they would act in unison, as a unitary, interdependent organism. Within this systematized conception of the role of the men's virtues were conceived as revolving around modesty, quietude and chastity as well as obedience to fathers and husbands. Women were charged with responsibility for maintaining the domestic harmony that underscored state harmony.

In over a century of modernization and revolution in China from the late 1890s to the late 1970s, these conceptions of the family and female virtues were labelled 'feudal' and came under concerted assault from intellectuals and activists across the political spectrum, including liberals, anarchists,
